Credit Card Companies are Playing a Game of Cat and Mouse

Foster City, CA – August 28, 2019 – "The e-commerce fraud scene is an arms race, and thus, no one can rest of their laurels," says the founder of identity theft protection company Trusona. CardRatings.com, a leader in credit card ratings, is offering insight to for cardholders looking to protect themselves in the age of identity theft, data breaches, major hacks and fraud.

CardRatings outlines the ways card issuers are innovating to protect their clients here. The site looked at what some of the top issuers, including Bank of America, Capital One, Chase, Wells Fargo and more, are doing to go above and beyond the typical fraud alerts and protections. Here are a few of the offers:

- Monitoring cardholders' Social Security numbers for appearances on the Dark Web
- Signing in to a mobile app to make a purchase which then compares the purchase location to the phone's location
- Instant credit card freezes
- Mobile app logins that utilize fingerprint or facial recognition technology
